

Course Information Sheet for entry in 2017-18

Master of Public Policy (MPP)

About the course

The Master of Public Policy (MPP) is a one-year taught degree course. It enables you to develop analytical and critical skills relevant for understanding the challenges of public policy and its implementation. It also equips you with skills that are essential for effective policy delivery.

The MPP begins with a selection of introductory activities during the induction fortnight. These provide an introduction to policy-making and the MPP as a whole. The curriculum is then orientated around academic learning and developing skills necessary for effective policy-making and analysis.

The current curriculum includes six compulsory core modules:

- Foundations introduces philosophical concepts and dilemmas facing governments around the world
- Economics for Public Policy seeks to prepare you for interaction with professional economists by developing the skills necessary to become a critical consumer of economic thinking
- Politics of Policy-making explores the political challenges of policy-making across a range of national contexts and policy domains.
- Science and Public Policy considers ways to understand scientific and medical evidence, the policy implications of this evidence, and the interplay between science and conflicting policy concerns
- Law and Public Policy discusses legal systems, legislation, and law both as a constraint on government and as applicable beyond the nation state
- Policy Evaluation demonstrates the contribution that research evidence can make to public policy and provides you with tools that allow you to be a more effective and critical consumer of research evidence

These core modules draw on insights and approaches found within a range of academic disciplines. Taught by academics with direct experience of working in or with institutions or individuals engaged with policy-making, the modules also include opportunities to learn from policy practitioners who will share with you their experiences of real-world problems and policies.

The academic modules are taken alongside a number of more practically oriented modules. These applied policy modules include topics such as strategy, communication, finance, and negotiation. There are also professional skills sessions throughout the year which are designed to help you develop specific skills for successful careers in public policy.

In the third term, you will have the opportunity to select two modules which allow you to specialise on issues of personal interest to you. You will then undertake a summer project placement, for a minimum of six weeks, with a governmental, non-governmental, or private organisation to work on a mutually agreed policy-relevant issue. The BSG website provides more information about the summer project. At the end of your placement you will be required to submit a related policy analysis report and reflective essay. Following successful completion of the course you will then have the option to return to Oxford later in the year to take part in graduation-related events.

Additional cost information

There may be additional fees associated with the 6 to 8 week summer project. Students choose their host organisation and the topic of their summer project depending on their individual interests. MPP students have undertaken their summer projects with organisations across all sectors; government, non-profit, international and the private sector. The location of summer projects also greatly varies depending on a student's interests. Some students decide to carry out their summer project in Oxford or elsewhere in the UK, some return to their home countries and others undertake projects elsewhere in the world. Therefore, costs associated with the summer project may vary depending on the location.

Students will need to meet the costs of travel, accommodation and living expenses, if applicable. Host organisations are sometimes able to provide funding for additional costs associated with a student's summer project. Where this is not possible students must seek alternative sources of funding. In addition, the School has a limited MPP summer project bursary fund to which students may apply for funding. The BSG website provides more information about the Summer Project.
